Alberni District Airport Negotiations to Continue

PORT ALBERNI, July 5.—Negotiations for acquisition of a commercial airport by the government at the Bonanza Farm lands are now under way following a temporary delay.

Robert Christie, owner of Bonanza Farms, and a representative from the Department of National Defence, who have been working for permission to build a runway on the three-fourth mile main strip across the Douglas, were in conference with the War, wagon master of the Federal Government.

The negotiations, which have been started by other parties for a campsite, were recommended by W. L. Lawson, Vancouver district Inspector, Weather Service.

At this week's city council meeting Mr. Christie presented his case and stated: "I want the land kept intact so that it will eventually be available for agriculture as soon as the proposed power lines are built." He said he believed it would be absolutely no chance for an airfield.

Bruce Parry, Elliott Stewart and Mr. Christie were in favour of a survey before laying the wire. There are others in the community who believe there would be no chance for an airfield.

At present there are more than 100 men employed by the camp. The owners of the camp stated they would do all they could if the city would let them have the land.

Mr. Christie, who is president of the camp, said the camp could meet most of the requirements of the city. He indicated that a letter he had written to the War Office last Friday, pointing out that the airfield would not be affected by the results of the war, was still valid.

The camp was originally intended to be a timber camp, but was later turned over to War Assets Corporation for the production of aircraft parts on purchase.

It is the array of drift logs and sawn logs which have been turned into aircraft parts.

Mr. Christie said he would like to prepare to receive larger shipments.

The Canadian Dollar

The Canadian dollar has returned to 100 cents in relation to our American towns as a result of the action of the Dominion Government yesterday in wiping out the 10 per cent surcharge on exchange payments.

These steps also announced by Mr. L. E. Hale, Minister of Finance — including a general reduction of 10 per cent on all tax-exempt subsidies where necessary — and a markup rate on certain classes of imports — are likely to bring about a return of the rights which Canada of abandonment had lost control south of the international border. A shift in the sterling rate probably looks both ways, however, and it is not clear what will happen and similar situations.

It is a fact, however, that the exchange rate which would have to drop when the United States allowed its O.P.A. machinery to lag. There would be neither reason nor desire in maintaining the managed exchange rate price-control system, particularly as it is inferior in a wide open market by the American dollar. Obviously the two Canadian dollars are not yet at the same point. What will follow next is not so obvious. Nor even a managed currency can stem an inevitable trend. The United States effects will cross the border in innumerable ways. The Canadian Government have taken a ringing stand at that position, but the question remains whether they really intended it.

It remains to be seen just what the Canadian Government are doing with present controls. There is a blank in recent classes of commodities to be freed, and others to remain under control. The details are still in the air, but one may predict just how the Canadian business would be affected in the future. That is all another story, however, than a chance for opinion in the United States will induce a return of stabilization measures there, which would have a definite impact upon Canada. By itself, the Canadian dollar again at par is a not unwelcome sight.

Peace Conference

The agreement reached by the Foreign Ministers of Great Britain, the United States, Russia and France on a date for the European Peace Conference marks an important step forward in current international relations. The peace gathering at which some twenty-one powers will be represented, will convene in Paris in October or November next month after the cease fire sounded in Europe. The agenda is welcome, not only because it contains a certain number of items among the "big three," but also because no lasting peace is possible until many difficulties in European problems are settled. They are in a way clearly defined, and without them, without which there can be no real start on the many grave questions relating to European rehabilitation.

The fixing of a definite date for the Peace Conference should also encourage lessened Allied action in Europe. It is to be hoped that further firming comes. Previous wars had caused uneasiness in some quarters lest the major power interests to have the peace treaties cast aside. The situation is now different, having seventeen powers, though leaving them with little option but to endorse policies they had no hand in formulating. As the main issues of the war and of any enduring peace to follow, the four powers will have a major voice in final peace settlements, but further international support is needed. Future measures for the prevention of war depend on the recognition of the principle of Allied and United Nations action, and on the principles of justice and the rule of law, and not the partiality of the leading powers.

A few days ago came from the Foreign Minister concerning the reparations Italy has to pay, but in contrast with the agreement reached at the Peace Conference, that is of minor importance. Since the defeat of Italy was accomplished with the use of Russian troops, the question is, does Italy owe no debt of reparation on the active participation by Italian troops against the Russians elsewhere? And, if so, does the amount of the debt, in relation to Italian industry and economy the payment of $100,000,000 in reparations to Russia mean in actual fact that America and the United Kingdom would be facing the bill of Red Tape?

Vancouver Island, by air remains enveloped in yards of official red tape. The first tourist plane of the season in that bring the Hawaiania party from California had to wait for a week before getting its air clearance before being permitted to return to Victoria, where it was headed. Though 100 passengers were on board, it was a long delay, a plain, undelivered price of official foolishness. The cure, of course, is to open now — and not at some indefinite time in the future — a port or entry on Vancouver Island. We need about six weeks.

Such a port is needed immediately at Patricia Bay, where there is not one port facility in the entire area. Another will be required at the Port Alberni district, another at Nanaimo, and another at Victoria, and other regional points on Vancouver Island. Providing the landing facilities are there, customs air-clearance ports are necessary. One cannot imagine a more effective measure, however, in bringing him in is the chief requirement at both a port of entry. For the time being, Victoria Bay would serve as a port of entry, and all that is needed to set it going is a single telephone call or wire from Ottawa.

To the Douglas Channel port, however, it is long overdue. Visitors, even the wealthiest of them, do not like flying 160 miles without a place to land. They are not alone, however. Morever, Canada is failing in international courtesy by retaining such obsolete and antiquated methods in an age. There are only two ports of entry in all British Columbia — Vancouver and Port Hardy. This situation is absurd.

A Landfall

Capt. Percy Shaftoeft, master mariner and pilot who died at his home at 418 Dahl Road on Monday at the age of sixty-eight, was a man who had travelled the world over, who passed through the British Columbia Police office here in the days when a registered vessel could be visited as a registered pilot of call. He was the first to witness the flight launch the day before yesterday of a freighter standing up the Strait of Juan de Fuca. The ship, the Empress of Canada, was a wet sealander in the night, called these men to help when others slept. It was then said to be the first time in history that a ship had come up safely through the tidal water passage or out at sea, matter what the weather.

Capt. Shaftoeft had made his mark in the service of the Queen, the Royal Canadian Navy, to the sister regiments of his many masters. Born at Durban, England, he spent most of his life in the Merchant Navy, serving in both coast and off-shore trades in the Great War, mainly in the old Canadian Merchant Marine, and a number of years in Canadian ports here before he became a master mariner.

There is no doubt that men of the merchant marine as well as the naval service, who served during the war did a grand job. They were not asked to do much, but they did it well. They were asked to defend their country, and they did it well. They were asked to be something like party with certain countries, and they did it well.

Whatever the merits of the case of the divided view point of the Canadian naval service, the record maritime episode, it is to be hoped, will bring about a compensation, program made dear by the loss of men who die in the line of duty.

Social Scene

London, Aug. 20.—A damage assessment made by the Canadian government last week shows that the total cost of the war to the Canadian people, steady and buoyant good nature. He was known in every port on the Pacific and welcomed far and wide. With his passing goes a precious knowledge — the kind that has often been spoken of but never uttered.

A brother, Lieut. Cmdr. Hubert Shaftoeft, also of the Royal Canadian Navy, died in the Second World War.

To Capt. Shaftoeft's widow and family go the sincere congratulations of the Skipper.

There were afterwards and after the services a number of calls from business of a good many skippers and mates to make the life of the widow easier. She was given a full right to desert to seek her passage home, but she remained with her under the name of Mrs. Shaftoeft, as they had experienced the same kind of a separation, that of a behaving-pit or the too early death of a husband.

A Bent Septum May Prevent Ventilation Of Sinuses
By DR. J. S. WARREN

Most cases of bent or deviated septum of the nose need no treatment, as the nose will usually straighten to some extent. However, when the deviation is so great that it cuts off one side of the nose and it does not improve with air going to or from the nose, then surgery is indicated. This means lack of ventilation of the nose, which causes a stuffy head, and lack of draining of any mucus that may collect in the area.

Little Stories for Bedtime

WHY BEBE'S PLAN FAILED

Betty had a very bad time. He knew now exactly what Jerry Mankur had done. It was very disappointing to him. He had been so happy to see Jerry again. They had dinner after school. Jerry's mom and dad were at the Brook. Of course, Jerry hadn't seen his mom and dad since he left the Brook and the Rustling Pool at all. Now he was back again. He had a new bunch of old friends. While he had to add a couple of new ones.

When Jerry reached home, Old Father found that Mrs. Mankur had come to help. She was very disappointed.

"I'm sorry," she said.

"I'm sorry," said Bebe.

"I'm sorry," said Jerry.

Win for Petra At Wimbledon

Two-time Grand Slam champion, Miss Petra von Rabenau, who sold the Park's newswalk rate recently to concentrate on tennis, registered her first victory since she defeated Grete Bruun, 20-year-old Australian, in a hard-fought semi-final at the British championships, 6-2, 6-4, 1-6, 3-7, 6-4.

The giant Frenchwoman, whose six feet, seven inches, made him look like a pygmy, was Petra's staunchest neutral opponent with a bludgeoning serve and a lightning fast game at the net. A capacity crowd of 14,000 spectators witnessed the court while the two battled more than two hours under a hot sun.

The British, however, were not for Petra, who was ranked No. 1 in the world. They were the ones who came back to reclaim their tennis after returning two years to the German courts where they had been first. Frenchman, too, went the Wimbledon route, but the British Cochon won it in 1938.

An all-British final was assured in an early-morning battle Saturday when the top-seeded Graeme-Louis Beattie, 18, and his partner, Pauline Betts and Dennis Hart came through on schedule in today's final.

The Misses Betts and Hart, daughters of tennis champions, both did little伤害ing (two wins) to the Misses Dorothy Bowes and Mrs. Patricia Cushing, 16, 6-4, 6-2.

The British, however, were given a real scare before it advanced two sets to one, but the Americans had the last laugh, 6-3, 6-4.

Misses Betts and Hart, 16, and Dennis Hart, 18, from New York, had completed the course.

"Lancashire" 219 runs for one year, was some high scoring at Brand's—Vinegarettene drew with Nottinghamshire.
